BIOGRAPHY

Sander Dekker (Amsterdam, 1980) is an artist working with photography, installation, video and publications. His work documents how people present themselves — to each other, to cameras, and to the world they construct around themselves.

His practice is rooted in The Social Media Project, a decade-long series of encounters with strangers photographed in their own homes after first contact online. It caught something specific: a brief moment when reaching out to a stranger on social media felt open, easy and charged with possibility. That openness is slowly fleeing. What remains is a document of a particular kind of human behaviour that feels increasingly rare.

The questions that project raised have continued to drive everything since — through installations, handmade publications, participatory work and projects centred on people who push back against external pressure simply by being fully, visibly themselves.

SELECTED PRESS

“While embracing his own strangeness, he makes a true connection with his models. It’s what makes his work so very appealing.”

Marloes van Vugt — foreword, My Name Is Sander Dekker N°.2

“What makes his work so remarkable is the individuality and autonomy of his characters: they refuse to relinquish their power and above all: they seem to be unapologetically themselves.”

Flor Linckens — review, Gallery Viewer

“It’s a reflection of the zeitgeist: how normal it has become to show so much of yourself on social media, and how easy it was — or is — to make contact.”

Margot Pol — interview, de Volkskrant

“Like Arbus, Clark and Sultan, Sander Dekker is a child of his time.”

Edo Dijksterhuis — article, Het Parool
